The Street has been so often right in its cheerful assumptions that the gravest dangers in our relations with the European countries would be passed by in safety, that it was hardly a surprise yesterday to see stock prices holding relatively firm And yet the implications of the Hesperian incident were not less aerious than before, but more; and there was to be taken into consideration, besides the meeting last night of the Austrian Ambassador and Secretary Lansing, with its possible sequel, tie diplomat's dismissal from this country. When Wall Street is in the temper there can be no greater pessimism anywhere in the country. Similarly, when it commits itself to optimism, even a Mackensen or a von Hindenburg can show no more dogged-ness in folowing a chosen course. The Street has never believed that the United States would go to war with Gernany, though the market on occasions has reflected the surprises of the political situation. And since the Arabic incident and the German government's declaration of intentions it has been confirmed in its belief that whatever lengths Germany went to on the high reas she would avoid forcing this country into war. That belief has seemingly not been destroyed by the Hesperian incident, for which the Street yesterday had a wealth of explanations. As for the Dumba matter, the speculating community was satisfied to believe that the Ambassador would be suffered to remain in this country for a few weeks longer upon a hint that he would resign for his handled the support of the company of the year handled the support of the support of the support of the company to retire these dividends after completion of the new handled the political situation thus happily, the stock market could not reasonably have been expected to behave otherwise than it did.

Crucible Steel Cuts Up. Crucible Steel may be depended upon, in one sense at least. It can be trusted to furnish the stock market trusted to furnish the stock market with sensations when nearly everything else fails. Yesterday, when a rather dull session was threatening to go dewn into financial history with little to redeem it, one of those movements was turned on in Crucible that no week is without. From somewhere around 83 the stock was run up to 88½ and then allowed to fall back again to 84%, just as on Thursday of last week it was put through an almost identical range. Whenever the stock is run through its paces the prediction is apread through the financial district that it is going to par, apparently bethat it is going to par, apparently be-cause that is the nearest impressive round figure. Of late, however, the tip has hed less credence.

In coal trade circles there is not quite the optimism about foreign markets for our bituminous coal that is to be found in the neighborhood of the Stock Exchange. The coal has been piling up at tidewater, and shippers are said to be moving it even at a loss to avoid greater loss through car charges. "The Coal Trade Journal" says: "There is a less active inquiry will be it continues large, is not showing the growth that it did a few months ago." The Eastern railroads are stocking up heavily, and manufacturers and public service corporations are following the same policy, though with more moderation.
